SHE STUCK A KNIFE INTO HIM

Mabel Merchant Got Jealous Over John Mashal

MET HIM AT THE CAR

When He Returned From Toledo With Another Girl and Stabbed Him

A stabbing affray occurred on Washington street Sunday evening about 11 o'clock. Since then a warrant has been issued for the young woman in the case and the alleged facts are about as follows:

Mabel Merchant, a colored girl about 18 years old, it seems had been receiving the attentions of one, John Mashat, a young colored man. His regard for her seemed, however, to have waned and when he returned from a trip with his other girl Sunday evening he was met at the car by the Merchant girl, who said "If you won't go with me, you can't go with anyone else," and at once without further ado stabbed Mashat in the breast with a pocket knife.

Mashat grappled with her, but before she was disarmed she had struck him twice more, although in neither case did the knife penetrate his clothing. The first blow had gone home, however, over the right lung, and he was glad to secure assistance in walking home, and now is constrained to lie upon a couch with the wound carefully dressed and bandaged.

Mashat has paid the girl considerable attention, but of late his interest has centered about another young colored woman of the city, and Saturday evening he was returning with lady-love No. 2 from Toledo, where they had been spending the day in company with a second couple.

When they alighted from a D., Y. & A. A. car at the waiting room about 10 o'clock, Miss Merchant was waiting, and the moment she caught sight of the party she called to Mashat that she desired to speak with him.

Without preamble the irate young lady informed her quondam admirer that he must leave No. 2 with his male friend and escort her (No. 1) to her home.

On Mashat refusing to do so, the above disastrous consequences resulted.

A warrant was sworn out for Miss Merchant's arrest before Justice Childs Monday afternoon.

CHEAP EXCURSION TO HILLSDALE

The Normal students held a mass meeting at Normal hall Monday afternoon to make arrangements for attending the Intercollegiate Field Day at Hillsdale on Friday and Saturday, with the result that the announcement can now be made that a special train will leave for Hillsdale at 6:30 Friday morning, and will return Saturday evening at 7:45, the round trip to cost $1.83. This rate will also be good on the regular trains leaving Ypsilanti Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and returning any time up to Monday evening.

The other five colleges in the Intercollegiate will send large delegations to Hillsdale, and the Normal is making an effort to follow their example.

Much enthusiasm was manifested at the mass meeting, and rousing speeches were made by Principal Lyman, Prof. Roberts, Director Teetzel, Prof. Foster and Miss Walton, for the faculty, and P. P. Mason and George Gannon in behalf of the students.

HORSE THIEVES FIRE ON A PURSUER

The horse thieves or others of their ilk are still in this vicinity, it seems. Last night they called on Geo. N. Hammond in Augusta township. His son Milo thought he heard a noise at the barn and got up to investigate. When he went out he found two men were just hooking a horse on the buggy. They had run the buggy out of the barn, harnessed the horse and were just making it fast to the buggy when they were surprised. They left the rig and ran and he after them. The two thieves soon separated, but Hammond continued after one of them, chasing to near George Moore's residence, when the fellow turned and fired a gun at his pursuer. Hammond, being unarmed, concluded it was time to quit the chase.

It is thought the gang now operating in this vicinity is the same one that has caused the officers so much trouble heretofore. They have succeeded in getting away with most of their plunder, but in two or three instances have been caught. It seems to be a rather easy thing to escape with a stolen rig.

THE THIEVES ESCAPED

OFFICERS TRACK THEM TO THE OHIO BORDER.

THERE LOST THE TRAIL

It Was an Exciting Chase While it Lasted But it Did Not Last Long.

Officer Ross and an assistant returned yesterday from a three days' unsuccessful search for the parties who stole a horse from J. F. Hunter Sunday night.

The officers tracked the thieves across the Ohio border, but here all individual hoof marks disappeared on a main-traveled road, so the scent was lost.

The chase was exciting while it lasted, but the unsatisfactory ending robbed it of the dime-novel interest which had attached itself to the midnight riding, and the occasional "trailing" by means of hoof-prints in the road.

The officers were dependent upon tracking for the reason that the thieves traveled by night and hence were not seen by the farmers along the route.

BROKE UP IN A GREAT ROW

GAME BETWEEN THE JUNIOR LAWS AND THE NORMALS

Decision by Umpire Wilson Was Objected to by the Normal Captain

The Normals and the U. of M. Laws are not good mixers, as has been proved in the football and baseball games of past seasons, which ended in rushes, and further evidence of this mutual incompatability of temperament turned up Tuesday afternoon, when Umpire Evan Wilson, a law student and a former Normalite, was compelled to call the game between the Normals and the 1902 laws in the last half of the last inning (the seventh), because the pedagogues objected to one of his decisions.

The freshman law class told the juniors they should make a reputation for themselves before challenging the championship class team. This they intended to do by defeating the Ypsi Normals.

It was the last half of the seventh inning, which by previous agreement was to be the finale of the game; the score was 7 to 4 in favor of Ypsilanti, Knight had made first for the laws and was stealing second when W. Gannon, the Normal catcher, threw to G. Gannon, the second baseman, and the latter swung around on Knight as he passed.

Umpire Wilson called the runner safe and George Gannon, who was acting as captain in the absence of Gass, protested that the decision was unfair. Wilson argued the point, but Gannon was obdurate, so after five minutes of discussion, in which the rest of the team except Gannon desired to let the decision pass and continue playing, Wilson called the game. The manager, the faculty members present, Director Teetzel and the majority of the spectators were in favor of respecting Wilson's decision, especially as he is a former popular Normal athlete himself, but Gannon held out.

A DETAILED REPORT OF THE KAZOO GAME

(Kalamazoo Gazette.)

Fifteen innings and Ypsilanti won in the last, is the story of the ball game between Kalamazoo and Ypsilanti colleges, on the campus Saturday afternoon.

The score was 8 to 7.

It was not a baseball day when the game opened. There was too much of a northeast wind blowing to warm the players up very much, but as the game progressed they seemed to have taken a hot sitz bath and they made the game a hifalutin, nerver-cracking exhibition which brought out great big gobs of enthusiasm from the bleachers, the fences, the Michigan Central tracks and every other old place within 113 feet of the grounds.

There were some pyrotechnical plays made in various stages of the game, which confused the spectators and kept everybody busy keeping track of things happening.

There was a good attendance; everybody had a double run for their money, and the Kalamazoo boys demonstrated that they can play even if they have met defeat at other times. Two or three times there was a chance to save the game and how they worked to do it, but the combination was bad and just as they were about to catch the car somebody would stub their toe and 'twould be to the fields again.

Inning after inning both sides failed to score; Ypsi made eight runs in four innings, Kalamazoo made seven in two.

Ypsi came to bat first, Dennis hit out a little one to left; Gannon came next and was given first on a choice, scoring on a wild throw of Hause, who tried to cut off Gannon at first. Gass made a hit, Sherman went out from Hause to McDonald, and Gannon was thrown out at the plate, while Gass scored on a dinky hit of Ireland's. King, Righter and Ireland each drew first and when Smith came to bat there were three men on bases; Schau let out his arm, Smith fanned and retired the side. Net results, two for Ypsi.

Kalamazoo sent Schau up to raise the curtain. He made a driving daisy cutter past King. North got a hit, Hause touched the ball and won first on an error of King's. Koster touched the sphere for two bases; Upjohn drew first by an error of Ireland's and during all this time the four first men to bat had crossed the plate. Then Dasher, Kalmbach and Dye went out one, two, three.

That's the way the trouble began.

In the fifth inning Kalamazoo made three and in the eighth, by a successful bunching of hits, Ypsilanti tied the score.

That's where more trouble began.

From that time on, until the 15th inning, it was anybody's game. It was a case of "Now you see it and now you don't." They were up and down, one minute the sun shone, the next it was cloudy, and all the time the spectators worked closer to the edge of the seats until in the excitement a fat boy fell off the top row and lit on a bunch of bicycles beneath. The doctor says he will have the spokes all picked out by Thursday. After that there was quiet all over the grounds except now and then—mostly then.

The last attempt to break the spell was successful. Righter made a hit, Ireland fanned, Smith landed safely on first on a ball misjudged by Dasher—one of those measly high bounders that never is where you think it is—Righter stole second, was advanced to third on Smith's hit and stole home on Peters' sacrifice. He did it just in time, too, for the next man to bat flew out to Kalmbach.

Kalamazoo had a fighting chance, but could not accept. Schau hit to Sherman, was thrown out at first. North hit to King and was also thrown out at the initial bag. Hause made a little hit and by virtue of Dennis falling down won first. Koster tried to do his best, but his best was only three windy strikes and the agony was over.

FIFTY LADIES PLAYED WHIST

The electric cars brought to the city Friday morning a crowd of fifty well-dressed, intelligent and refined-looking ladies and gentelemen who proved to be the Michigan Women's Whist association and their guests, bound for the Ladies' Library building to hold one of their summer series of meetings around the state.

The strangers were received by the Ypsilanti members of the association and entertained at hotels or private residences until 2 o'clock, when all gathered at the library for the afternoon session.

The party resolved itself into 19 "tables," and from 2 o'clock until shortly after not a sound disturbed the building but the subdued rustle of cards, an occasional whisper and at regular intervals the momentary confusion caused by half the company quietly changing places at the tables in order to be with different partners.

On the conclusion of the afternoon game the guests were escorted to the Episcopal Parish House, where supper had been prepared by the church ladies, and here they were entertained until 7:30, when the evening session opened at the library.

Ypsilanti was well represented at the meeting, and fared well in the contest, as C. W. Rogers, with Mrs. Waldron, secured top score east and west, and hence won a trophy pin, while the majority of the other Ypsilantians made plus scores.

The trophy pins for north and south were won by Bennett and Shearer with a plus 14 4-5 score.

MAY FESTIVAL FRIDAY EVENING

The May festival at the M. E. church Friday evening was a pretty affair and enjoyed by everybody present. The threatening weather kept many away, yet the church was well filled with interested spectators. "A Picnic in Fairyland" was a beautiful conception. Many children were dressed as fairies under the leadership of the Queen of May. They received the Gipsy Queen and the Queen of the Woods in a pretty ceremony. The flower drill was pleasing, too. The winding of the May-pole was just as attractive as ever. The whole program in fact was made up with good taste and carried out in a very pleasing manner.

Mystery Of an Opal Necklace

San Ribo, Mexican Thief, Outwitted By an American Girl

San Ribo, the most notorious ratero (sneak thief) in the City of Mexico, through a clever trick robbed Miss Helen Scott Bevin of a beautiful opal necklace, a family heirloom. Despairing of recovering it through the police, Miss Bevin, who is a member of the General Winfield Scott family, formulated a plan for his capture and the recovery of her precious jewels which was entirely successful. Miss Bevin tells the story:

Among my acquaintances in Mexico was the Senorita Perez, who is a very popular actress. She, too, had been robbed of a diamond sunburst, and San Ribo was the suspected thief. It was while discussing the matter with her that I decided to try personally to recover my opals and not wait for the indifferent police.

I thought the matter over a la Sherlock Holmes. Then I hatched the scheme to bait San Ribo with a rich prize and draw him from his hiding place. For this purpose I borrowed the paste diamonds that Senorita Perez used on the stage for display in royal parts. They were excellent imitations and might easily deceive any one but a gem expert.

"Now," said I, "if San Ribo beats me at this game of wits he will only get sham jewels for a reward."

I mentioned to all my sympathizing acquaintances that, although I had lost the opals, I had saved my valuable diamonds from the ratero. To those I knew would spread the rumor I showed the flashing imitations. I took care to let the prattling servants get sight of them. In two days there was more talk over the jewels the rich Americano had saved than over the stolen opals.

The first fruit of the furore was the appearance of a private detective. This Senor Ruiz seemed more intelligent than the other officers, who had buoyed me up with false clews. He declared that a ratero decoy had brought him information that my stolen opal necklace had been broken up so that the gems could be sold separately. Detective Ruiz wanted to know if I could identify the diamonds in the pendant. Were they like any of the diamonds I had left? Could he see these diamonds?

According to my plan I had determined to suspect everybody, so I refused. Then without more ado he calmly pulled an opal from his pocket and handed it to me.

It was one of my lost Hungarian opals!

"San Ribo," he explained, "is trying to sell them to a 'fence' I know. The fellow let me have this opal under promise that he should get part of the capture reward for the ratero. So you see I am hot on his trail. I think we can land the scamp in a few hours."

In a day or two Detective Ruiz returned and suggested an ingenious device for capturing San Ribo. It was practically the same trap I myself had planned, and I told him so. I did not tell him, however, that the diamonds were paste, fearing Senorita Perez would not care to have it known.

That week I had been invited to a ball at the country residence of President Diaz's son, and Detective Ruiz advised me to spread the report that I would wear my diamonds on that occasion. Then I was to make up a false jewel packet which my maid, who would accompany me, was to carry. The real jewels in a separate bag I was to carry myself. The maid was to be carefully watched by disguised officers who would be ready to seize San Ribo or anybody else who should attempt by any trick to purloin the jewels.

Detective Ruiz explained how the false package was to be made up for the maid to carry. Then I was to carry the real jewels in a leather reticule securely fastened to my belt.

Well, on the day the trap was to be sprung, according to arrangements Detective Ruiz came to the hotel and fixed the bogus bag for the maid. I myself had placed the Senorita Perez imitation diamonds in the duplicate bag and had it securely fastened to my belt before I stepped into the room where the detective was waiting.

"Are you sure it is safely fastened to the belt?" he said, bending over to examine the clasp.

"Positive," I answered. I happened to be standing near a mirror, and while he was scrutinizing the fastenings I took a last hasty glance at my toilet. We were standing on the grand stairway waiting for the carriage when, glancing at my gown, I discovered I had forgotten a diamond clasp I always wear with it. Just then a porter called our carriage, and I saw that the special officers detailed by the police were already on guard. I sent the maid down the stairs and asked Detective Ruis to return to my room and ask the girl there for the clasp which was in the dressing case.

One of the officers in the court below looked up and, observing me standing there, came up the stairs. While he was approaching my hands thoughtlessly touched the reticule at my belt. I smiled to think how safe the paste jewels were and half absentmindedly touched the spring to glance at the contents. I stared dumfounded at what I saw. It looked like my leather reticule, but the contents had been changed since I had fastened it at my belt a few short moments before.

It was filled with small jewel boxes, but wholly unlike the ones I had placed there. I opened one of them to prove that I was not dreaming. It was empty

Only one human being beside myself had touched that bag, Detective Ruiz. The whole cunning scheme flashed across my mind. He was either the crafty San Ribo or a confederate and, believing the jewels genuine, had substituted this false bag for the one I had placed at my belt.

Quickly I beckoned the approaching officer. "Quick!" I cried. "Catch the man you saw just leave me. He has gone to my room! He is San Ribo!"

The officer signaled his men below, and they dashed after the cunning ratero, I following them.

They found that arch thief San Ribo at work. He had not only the diamond clasp, but into his pockets he had stuffed many other valuables.

They covered him with revolvers, and he gave up without a struggle.

"Ah, senorita," he said coolly, "you discovered the changed bags too quickly! One little minute more and I should have escaped by the side entrance of the hotel."

It was not until he had, in the hope of a lighter sentence, disclosed the hiding place of my opal necklace that I told him the diamonds he had taken so much pains to steal were only paste.

DIVER FIGHTS WITH DEVILFISH

Killed the Octopus After a Terrific Combat With the Dreadful Monster.

Nearly every one is familiar with the battle of the hero of Victor Hugo's novel, "Toilers of the Sea," with a monster devilfish which attacked him in a cave in an island in the English channel. It is a thrilling story as told by the great novelist, but as an incident of fiction it lacks the quality of interest which attaches to an actual happening in real life and on our own shores.

Captain Ed Conrad, one of the best known divers in the country, died recently at his home in New Orleans indirectly as the result of a terrific fight he had with a devilfish.

He was working on the steamship S. Oterl when a huge octopus stretched forth one of his tentacles to draw him into his capacious jaws. The diver cut off the arm, but another was thrust forth and grasped him, and a most desperate conflict in the sea ensued. Captain Conrad was a tall, powerful man and an athlete, but his strength was of little avail, with the resistance of the water and his cumbrous armor militating against the free use of his limbs and his ability to strike a fatal blow, but he finally killed the monster and, nearly exhausted from the fearful struggle, was raised to the surface and divested of his armor.

He suffered terribly from the experience, but insisted on exploring the wreck of the battleship Maine for a firm of contractors. He had to quit work, come home, and death finally came to him.

THE OFFICERS HAD A BUSY DAY

Friday was a busy day with Officer Ross, as he captured, with assistance in one case, a horse thief, an alleged burglar, and the receiver of stolen property.

An Ypsilantian named Tuttle rented a horse from the DeMosh livery Friday morning, and while he was in Jacob Smith's saloon playing cards, a stranger untied it and drove off to Belleville.

The police were notified and Marshal Warner soon located the man at Belleville, but was unable to reach by telephone anyone who would arrest him. Accordingly he and George DeMosh the proprietor of the livery, set out to land the horse thief themselves, but when they reached Belleville found that the bird had flown.

In the meantime the stranger, whose name proved to be Ira R. Counsellour, drove back to Ypsilanti and when not far from the Grove brewery induced an innocent party whom he met on the way to return the horse to the livery.

Word of this came to Constable Ross, and he immediately set out for the place where Counsellour had been last seen, to run him to earth if possible, and as he met Warner and DeMosh on the return trip from Belleville, the three joined forces. After considerable trouble and much vain searching Counsellor was located at the home of relatives near the brewery, and without delay, it then being about 7:30 p. m., was conveyed to the city jail to await examination this morning.

Ross made a trip to Battle Creek on Thursday and arrested a man named W. J. Fuller, who was charged with entering the Webster, Cobb Lumber Co.'s plant and stealing an automatic saw set. Fuller was brought before Justice Joslyn yesterday, but there was no direct proof against him, so he was discharged.

He left Saturday night, is known to have entered the shop on Sunday to remove his tools, and on Monday the saw set was missing, so it is not surprising that he was held for examination.

Ross arrested Joseph Bernstein and Abraham Bernstein, the junk dealer of the east side, Friday for receiving stolen property, having worked the case up for the D., Y. & A. A. Three lads stole $50 worth of bond wire from the railroad company, and in locating them Ross learned that their plunder had been sold to the Jew junk dealer. They stoutly denied knowing anything about the matter, but a careful search of their quarters revealed the wire hidden away in an obscure corner.

Justice Joslyn released them, on their paying costs and settling with the D., Y. & A. A.

STREET INCIDENTS.

"My dear sir," exclaimed Lawyer Bartholomew Livingston, meeting the Rev. Dr. Archibald Windham on the village street, "What does this mean? I thought you were laid up with all sorts of bad diseases!"

"And so I was," replied the reverend gentleman, "I had an attack of indigestion and from that time on my whole system has been in a disordered condition uptil I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla which has put me on my feet and cured alll my stomach troubles."

"I don't doubt it," replied the lawyer. "This same medicine cured my wife of rheumatism and my little girl of scrofula. When they say it's the best medicine money can buy, they only tell the truth."

DECORATION DAY WAS OBSERVED

IN A VERY PATRIOTIC MANNER YESTERDAY

The Program was Carried Out in Detail—Exercises Not Marred by Rain

The Decoration Day services in Ypsilanti Thursday passed off most satisfactorily, and apparently there has never been deeper or more patriotic feeling manifested for the survivors of the great civil conflict than was shown them yesterday. The members of Carpenter Post to the number of 60 assembled at the post with the ladies of the W. R. C. and were escorted to the M. E. church by Company L, where the first part of the program was carried out. There was music by the band and by the public school children, declamations, the recitation of Lincoln's Gettysburg speech by Fr. Kennedy and an oration by Hon. S. W. Burroughs of Detroit. It was a studied oration and filled with patriotism and eulogy for the brave men who fought the great fight. He dwelt at considerable length upon the political causes of the war.

After the exercises at the church the line of march was taken for Highland cemetery, where the exercises were completed and the graves decorated. After music by the band, Company L fired three volleys and taps were sounded, after which the military organizations returned to their respective headquarters, when they dispersed and the formal exercises of the day were over.

MUSIC SECTION HELD ITS MEETING

Wednesday, May 29, the music section of the Literary and Study clubs held its meeting at the residence of Mrs. John A. Watling. The year's work of the Literary club has been the history of Holland, and hence, very appropriately, the hostess had decorated her parlors with masses of beautiful tulips.

Besides the members of the two clubs some invited guests were present. So that about 75 ladies had the pleasure of listening to an entertainment of unusual interest and merit.

The subject for the music section for the year has been "The Development of Music in America," and a very interesting report was given by Mrs. Yerkes.

Mrs. Gilbert gave a sketch of Gottschalk and his music was illustrated by "The Last Hope," a piano duet given by Mrs. Riley and Mrs. Hewitt, and his masterpiece, "The Tremolo," which was most admirably rendered by Mrs. Riley. Mrs. Key sang "The Creole Lover's Song," by Dudley Buck. Some of MacDowell's compositions were given by Mrs. Worden. A number of pieces by Ethelbert Nevin, whose recent death is so great a loss to the musical world, were rendered by Mrs. Pease, Mrs. Watling, Mrs. Riley, Mrs. Hawk and Mrs. Worden.

A most delightful variety was afforded by the marvelously birdlike whistling by Mrs. Riley of "The Mockingbird," with her piano accompaniment, and also a dramatic recital and chant most beautifully executed by Mrs. Watling. This was Longfellow's "King Robert of Sicily," arranged with an accert of Sicily," arranged with an accompaniment and sweep of music that gave power and beauty to this legend which moved every heart.

Mrs. Chas. Wright of Detroit, sister of Mrs. Watling, afforded a most appropriate addition to the program by her artistic rendering of the aria "Una Voce Poca Fa," from "The Barber of Seville," the first Italian opera ever successfully given in America.

She responded to an enthusiastic encore by a charming lullaby song.

The entire performance was most enjoyable and the members of the music section are to be congratulated upon their success.

Perilous Shark Hunt

Thrilling Experience Of Two White Men On the Mindanao Coast

A short time ago two American officers stationed in the seacoast district of southern Mindanao, Philippine Islands, were invited by a local chief to a day's sport at shark hunting. Kato, a native chief, was their host. One of them relates their experience:

"The hunt was set for the day after our arrival. Promptly at daybreak a great hullabaloo on the shale beach signalized the preparation of the boats, and after a hasty breakfast we were off.

"Soon our canoe was entering the narrow channel between the coral cliffs, and the rest of the fleet was tailing out in single file behind us. Kato warned us in low tones against loud speech or unguarded movements. At a sign from him a well built native of middle age, with a long cloak over him, stepped upon the forward overhang and peered ahead of us.

"Our lookout stood like a statue, shaking his head from time to time as Kato whispered a question to him. There was an order, and the paddles stopped moving entirely. We were drifting on a slow current in a bay, all but surrounded by the coral reefs. Presently there came from one of the craft to the right of us a sharp clucking sound. The lookout of this canoe was pointing to a spot in the water a little in front and between us and himself. Stretching my neck, I peered eagerly into the water and presently made out what looked like a dull blotch swaying just above the bottom at a depth of perhaps 10 or 15 feet. It was a shark asleep after gorging himself with the offal scattered for him.

"The man slipped off his long coat and stood before us stark naked, a model of lithe muscularity. Stooping, he attached to one ankle a heavy weight. Over one shoulder he had coiled a noose at the end of a long rope. Between his teeth he held a short, broad bladed, keen kris.

"The chief made another signal, and the diver was gone. So skillfully did he slip into the water that there was no disturbance of the surface other than a little whirlpool where he went down and a slight ripple from the noose rope as he paid it out while sinking. The end of the rope was held by two of the paddle men. No sooner had the diver reached the bottom than he set out toward the shark. His every movement was distinctly visible.

"The diver unslung his noose. With marvelous deftness he slipped it over the head of the monster and threw up his hands in a signal. Instantly those in the boat hauled in the rope, the noose tightened, and the shark was caught.

"There was a quick, powerful movement of the great fish's tail. Kato shouted an order, and those in the boat let the rope slip. It fairly sang on the gunwale as the shark darted down at the diver. The man had moved off a few feet, but now he planted himself firmly, seized his puny little sword in both hands and waited. We saw the white of the monster's belly as he turned, shark fashion, to seize his prey and the gleam of his murderous teeth.

"The next thing I saw was a red stain on the surface of the water. Then my eyes wandered to the bow of the canoe, and there, climbing upon the overhang, was the diver. He was unhurt, but panting strongly, for he had been under water for three minutes. The blood that had come to the surface was not his, but his adversary's. Standing firm to the onset, he had bent swiftly to one side as the shark darted at him and, holding his weapon rigid, had slit the great body almost to the tail.

"Meantime the shark had died in a final flurry. At a signal from Kato the carcass was pulled alongside and made fast to the thwarts of the canoe with a small line. This accomplished, we prepared to disentangle it from the rope, the whole length of which, about 50 feet, was wound in an apparently inextricable snarl from the wild rushing and thrashing of the monster in his death throes. I was busily intent on the subsequent securing of the shark to the side of the canoe, when I heard a sharp, cutting sound in the water and, to my dismay, saw that it came from the gaff topsaillike fin of a huge shark which was coming up with the speed of a torpedo boat. The presence of this new monster was likewise at once described by Kato and the others. In place of the almost deathlike silence which had prevailed hitherto an unearthly hubbub arose, for a score more of similar cutting fins coming from as many different directions showed that the smell of blood from the dead shark had attracted a whole school of the sleeping monsters.

"At the first intimation of this new danger the canoes had begun a hasty scramble for the shore; but, being farthest removed from the channel, we had not proceeded ten yards when we were surrounded on all sides by the man eaters, who circled around and gradually closed in on us. Thoroughly aroused, the crewmen worked like demons.

"In this crisis I almost involuntarily seized my revolver and fired at the ugly snout of one of the monsters, scarcely half a dozen feet away, and then, in the very terror of desperation, emptied each chamber wherever a shadowy form disclosed itself. Mechanical as had been the thought and subsequent action, it served the purpose and gave us the brief respite necessary to make good our escape. Forgetting the human prey, the unwounded sharks fell upon the one I had shot, and soon the living and the dead were all mixed up together in a whirling, tumultuous mass. The water above them, as the horrible feast progressed, bubbled and boiled like a huge caldron, while the noise of the rending and tearing of flesh was sickening.

"A moment more and the exultant cries of Kato and the canoemen announced that we were in shallow water near the shore, safe from further attacks of the man eaters."

HEROISM OF A YOUNG GIRL

Unaided She Saves Her Pupils From Death In a Raging Nebraska Flood.

During the recent floods in Nebraska, which caused great damage to property and some loss of life, a young woman schoolteacher showed a courage and fortitude in the midst of danger that puts her in the highest class of heroines. Alone and aided only by a horse she saved the lives of a score or more of school children who were attending the district school near Harrison, Sioux county. The story of her heroic deed is as follows:

The teacher and pupils were attending to their various tasks all unconscious of the danger that threatened them, when suddenly Miss Cottman felt a strange, uncanny movement under her feet. Again it came, this time so strong that the scholars looked up in terror. Stepping to the doorway, Miss Cottman witnessed a sight sufficient to stir the strongest soul. The White river was out of its banks. The school building was already surrounded, and the rising flood was hurling its power against the frail frame structure.

Instantly Miss Cottman's purpose was formed. Across the expanse of water, tugging at his long rope, was a horse ridden by one of the scholars to the school. Springing out fearlessly into the muddy and debris filled sea, Miss Cottman waded more than waist deep to the horse's side. Then she began the struggle back, her helpless scholars watching her in terror. It was frightful at best, but when a great wave struck the building, causing it to totter and break partially loose, Miss Cottman's courage almost failed. Heroically, however, she pressed on and fastened the rope to the saddle and then to the building, giving it the aid of the horse's strength.

For three-quarters of an hour she stood at the horse's head up to her armpits in the chilling torrent until one of the largest of the scholars waded across to land and returned with assistance from the neighbors, distant several hundred yards. The children were rescued; the building was safe.

It is being suggested by the people of Sioux county that some signal recognition be given Miss Cottman by the county, but what form it will take has not yet been decided.

SPIRIT WORLD VOUCHED FOR

London Doctors Claim to Have Established Communication.

Dr. C. Lloyd Tuckey, a prominent member of the medical profession in London, caused a sensation in psychical research circles recently by announcing that he and another well known physician had succeeded in communicating with the spirit world through a trance medium, says the New York Herald. Dr. Tuckey holds a membership in the Society For Psychical Research, of which Dr. Oliver Lodge is president. Among the vice presidents of the organization are Professor William James of Harvard and Professor S. P. Langley of the Smithsonian institution. Its active membership includes Mr. A. J. Balfour, Sir William Crookes, Professor Henry Sedgwick, Lady Henry Somerset, Mr. James P. Bryce, Dr. Conan Doyle, Lady Jeune and many other eminent personages.

For several months Dr. Tuckey and his professional associates have been experimenting in the realm of spiritual phenomena. They have given particular study to trance mediumship in all its phases. Prominent among the mediums who have been seeking to convince the physicians that their craft was neither mythical nor supernatural is Mrs. Edmond Thompson of South Hill Park, Hampstead.

She has the reputation of being thoroughly rational and scientific, yet claims to be able to communicate at will with personalities no longer in the flesh. She recently gave a series of exhibitions of her power under the scrutiny of Dr. Tuckey and other investigators. After applying numerous tests they decided that Mrs. Thompson's trances were real and that she actually bridged the chasm between the finite and the infinite. Neither Dr. Tuckey nor Mrs. Thompson for the present will disclose in detail the nature or extent of their discoveries.

Mr. Edward T. Bennett, secretary of the Society For Psychical Research, said: "Dr. Tuckey and his fellow experimenters do not care to advertise their efforts in the direction of establishing a species of wireless telegraphy between the material and spiritual worlds. Our society will refrain from any attempt to popularize the investigation of psychical subjects. Dr. Tuckey and his associates have made important tests of trance mediumship and have been convinced of the possibility of speaking with disembodied intelligences. They will lay the result of their experiments before our society in extenso. Until then nothing further can be said."

WHEAT OF INDIA.

Reports Indicate a Short Crop This Season.

The second memorandum on the wheat crop for 1900-1 issued by the statistical department of the government of India modifies the expectations of the first, which declared that "in Bengal and northern India all conditions point to the harvest of a crop of quite unusual excellence." It is now announced that, owing to prolonged rainy and cloudy weather in February, rust has developed to a considerable extent, rendering the amount of crop very uncertain.

In the central provinces the conditions are said to continue good, but here the area under cultivation is comparatively small. In the nizam's territory there is the prospect of an average crop, but in Bombay and Berar the condition of the crop, which was sown on a greatly restricted area, "leaves much to be desired, and the yield will be much below the average."

With regard to Punjab, advices furnished by the department of agriculture in Lahore are that "the area under wheat was estimated last November at 7,804,800 acres. The present estimate, which includes further sowings made on unirrigated lands in consequence of the favorable winter rains, is 8,452,900 acres." But owing to the subsequent appearance of rust it is added that the expected crop will be greatly reduced.

CIGARETTE LEAST HARMFUL

The Lancet Says the Cigar and Pipe Are Worse In That Order.

The London Lancet of recent date has an article on nicotine and inverts the order of injuriousness usually associated with three forms of smoking. It states that nicotine itself has been proved by analysis to be practically guiltless of evil effects in smoking, but pyridine and its relatives are responsible for headache, trembling and giddiness.

The article proceeds to say that the degree of toxicity in the smoke probably depends largely upon the completeness of combustion. The combustion of a cigarette is more complete than that of the pipe or the cigar. The pipe acts as a condenser, but the condensed products do not reach the mouth, while considerable condensation must occur in a cigar, the products reaching the mouth and being absorbed.

Therefore The Lancet makes the order of injuriousness, beginning with the worst, as follows: Cigar, pipe, cigarette.

Cats to Check Rabbits.

Australian papers state that the experiment of the West Australian government in turning domestic cats loose in the southeastern districts of the colony to check the invasion of rabbits from South Australia has been a pronounced success. The felines destroyed immense numbers of the pests, and in some cases almost cleared the squatters' runs of the rabbits. In anticipation of the demand which is expected for cats for this work breeding establishments are being started. It is believed, however, that it will be found much cheaper to import the animals.

CAPT. ALLEN SPOKE IN DETROIT

Ex-Congressman E. P. Allen was the chief orator at the Decoration Day services in Detroit Thursday which the morning papers pronounce the most successful in years. Among other things Capt. Allen said:

The force which bore our volunteers to victory may be found in the mental and moral training acquired in the little school and church. They understood what liberty meant and understood that one repulse to the republic meant its turning into a slave-holding country. They did not enlist for money or for fun. They ran once but got a lesson at Manassas that they never forgot during the war, and they ran again, but straight at the 'Johnnies."

"We shall not stop with ourselves. We respect the confederates for brave men. We only wish they could rise today to see what has been done and they would rejoice with us. Love and tears for the blue and tears and love for the gray—that is the sentiment of the American soldier today.

"There never shall be a May when its flowers are not laid on the grave of the private soldier so long as the men and women of this country are faithful to its past and mindful of its future. God bless the private soldier!"

CITY BALL TEAM IS A CREDIT

THEY PLAYED A FINE GAME YESTERDAY

Although Beaten They Feel Well Satisfied With the Showing Against a Strong Team

The ball game between the City team and the Maccabees of Detroit Thursday was as fine a game as ever was seen between two such organizations. Up to the first half of the eighth inning the score stood 3 to 3. The game when finished stood 6 to 5 in favor of the Maccabees. The home team made a record of 5 runs, 9 hits and 2 errors. The Maccabees made 6 runs 8 hits and 6 errors. There was a large attendance and the boys of the city team feel elated although they lost the game. The crowd present manifested the most lively interest and this is always a great help. It is hoped as the season advances this interest will not only continue but will increase. If so some fine games may be anticipated. The boys made a fine showing yesterday and everybody was pleased with the initial game.

Entered at the Postoffice in Ypsilantl, Michigan as second class matter.

THURSDAY, JUNE 6.

When one's action does not square with his word his action is generally accepted as indicating his real position. President McKinley said at San Francisco that he had devoted the efforts of his life "to give workingmen the best opportunity, the best chance for good wages and steady employment." But he has been the high priest of extreme protection at one time and now he is quoted as being for reciprocal trade. His protection policy prevented the laboring man buying where he could buy cheapest and at the same time compelled him to sell his labor in an absolutely free trade market. His efforts secured real protection to the manufacturer, but did not secure to the workingman "the best opportunity." It compelled him to sell his product in a free trade market and purchase in a restricted market. But now as the manufacturer wants more than the "home market" McKinley stands ready to give it to him. Now, if the president's policy was right in the first instance from the viewpoint of the best opportunity for labor, how can it be right now? And if he is right now, what can be said for him when he was building up extreme tariff barriers? His course appears consistent enough from the standpoint of the manufacturer but not as to labor. His action indicates more conclusively than his word that the workingman is not the party for whom he is exercising solicitude. It is wholly safe to conclude that he does not stand now for any breaking down of a tariff barrier in the interest of labor as against trusts. As our tariff laws now stand, and William McKinley is as much responsible for them as any man, the masses of our people are being taxed heavily to cheapen our goods in foreign markets and add profits to the business of the trusts. These huge organizations of capital through the agency of the tariff laws, are enabled to discriminate against the buyers at home. Yet this man of easy conscience stands up and says the efforts of his life have been to better the condition of laboring men. Shall he be judged by his action or by his word?

The supreme court of the United States is peculiar and alone in that it is always right. Yet some times when it is right it is wrong and when it is wrong it is right. But even under such circumstances the court alone may say that it is wrong when it is right or right when it is wrong. But whatever it says is right even if it is wrong. The following cases mention by the New York World illustrate how this may be:

1. It has decided (Dartmouth college case), that a state charter is a contract which the state may not not break, and later that a state may break it.

2. It has decided that congress has exclusive authority to regulate commerce on all our navigable waters, and later that it has not. Later yet it has reversed and reaffirmed its first decision.

3. It has decided that stock certificates may not be issued under a state law, and later that they may.

4. It has decided that any state may prohibit the importation of alcoholic liquors, and later that no state may do so.

5. It has decided that congress has no power to make paper money legal tender for debts incurred before its issue, and later that it has unlimited power to make paper legal tender in peace or war.

6. It has twice decided that an income tax is constitutional, and once—the last time—that it is not.

It is perfectly possible that the insular decisions may add a seventh to the list.

The great oil magnate, Rockefeller, has given the Michigan University the income of $200,000 for laboratory research. Probably the oily kind will not tolerate the use of this money for research work in economics lest something may be discovered which will not square itself with the system by which Rockefeller has made his wealth.

The monstrous falsity of the pretense that British shipping was largely built up by subsidy is utterly exposed by the fact that only one-tenth of the British merchant shipping has ever rereceived a dollar of subsidy from the government in any shape. If the British merchant marine depended on subsidy not a British ship would be afloat except such as carry mails and passengers.—Philadelphia Record.

Senator Morgan says that democrats should abandon issues that have been slain by time and the logic of events and muster on the "no special privileges to favored interests" line. Does he think that issue is still an open question? To a man up a tree it looks mightily as though that issue had been slain by time and the logic of events. Special privileges to favored interests has long been established republican policy. Looks as though the senator desires to insure democratic defeat before the time for a campaign begins.

The colonial question is settled at last. Porto Rico and the Philippines are as much a part of the United States as Arizona and Oklahoma, but there is nothing to prevent any or all of these from being barred out by tariff laws, differing from those in force in the states. So says the supreme court.

The treasury department announces that it proposes to collect duties from the Philippines despite the fact that the supreme court's decision in regard to Porto Rico makes trade free with the islands until congress prescribes duties. This is just about what we should expect of the McKinley administration.

It might be worth while for Messrs. Tillman and McLaurin to write to Senator Platt of New York for information as to the best way of conducting a campaign for vindication. Mr. Platt had some experience in that line several years ago.

It is a question whether anyone born in a territory of the United States—while it was a territory—is eligible to the presidency. Under the decision of the supreme court, they are not native born citizens of the United States.

It follows from the decision of the supreme court that the United States can give away or sell any of its territorial possessions any time that it may get tired of them. This is some consolation.

Now that the islands have been annexed by treaty and divorced by act of congress, perhaps justice may spruce up and get to work on Neeley and Rathbone.

Will somebody please tell us whether the Presbyterian change of creed will affect the salvation of those who were saved under the old constitution and by-laws?

Now that Mr. Hanna has joined the G. A. R., there is some reason to believe that that organization will have some little influence with the president.

Y. W. C. A. NOTES.

The association year is closing, and the treasurer wishes all who have not paid their dues to do so without further solicitation.

There has been a call at our rummage sale for dishes, and for clothes for a little baby. The sale is open all day today.

The F. A. club meets tonight at 8. The annual meeting occurs Friday night at 8 o'clock. Reports of the year's work will be given and officers elected for the coming year.

The sewing school meets but twice more for a lesson—Saturday at 2:30.

The scientific class meets at 4 the same day. This class is not alone for those who plan to teach sewing in school, but for married women, as well as those who contemplate marriage. Every young woman should become a pupil to learn to use her needle deftly. Every stitch stands as a frank record of the worker's skill or incompetency. There is no branch of house work in khich one gets such big results for the labor and time expended as in the various forms of needlework.

The call for old papers and magazines still holds good, only the place of storing them is changed. It is now at the depot in the city storage company's office, first door west of Hopkins & Davis' grocery store.

Through the mail comes a good supply of embroidery silk—just what one of the classes needed. We thank the unknown sender.

Our meeting next Sunday is to be lead by Miss Hazel Hale, of the Normal Y. W. C. A.

FIRE DEPARTMENT UNDER DISCUSSION

VAN FOSSON FAVORS CHIEF BEING IN ENGINE HOUSE.

Meeting Closed With a Consideration of Ordinance for Cement Walks.

"This all goes to show that the chief of the fire department should be kept in the barn and at the head of the men," said Ald. Van Fossen, at the adjourned council meeting last evening, in the course of a heated discussion over a petty quarrel among the employes of the fire department. "Our charter prevents us from doing this," he continued, "but some time we shall have to change the charter to permit of such an arrangement."

"That's so," explained the rest of the council in concert, and their looks added the corollary, "and the sooner it is done the better."

An innocent-sounding resolution "that Albert Horseman be reinstated in the fire department," which, however, proved to be concealing a complicated by unimportant controversy among the fire department employes and the chief, called forth the above observation. Horseman and Chief Worden had words a few days ago, and the former resigned, but later asked to be taken back, and on the chief s refusing to re-employ him, induced an alderman to bring his case before the council.

The discussion between the aldermen and Fire Chief Davis brought out the fact that the discipline in the department is lax and that the employes indulge in senseless quareling, so a committee of three was appointed to investigate the present case and report at the next meeting.

The council devoted the remainder of their session to considering an ordinance regulating the building of cement walks according to the amended charter.

A lot was selected for the new training school at Mt. Pleasant on Normal street near the present buildings, and arrangements were made to secure plans for the new building which will be erected this summer.

Dyspepsia

Is difficult digestion, due to a weakened condition of the stomach and its inability to properly churn the food; or to unhealthy condition of the gastric juice, too much or too little acid, too much or too little pepsin.

Hood's Sarsaparilla relieves all the distressing symptoms of dyspepsia because it promotes the muscular action of the stomach and intestines, aids nature in the manufacture of her own digestive secretions, which are far better than any artificial pepsin, unlocks the bowels, stimulates the kidneys and tones up their mucous membranes.

So prompt is its effect in many cases that it seems to have almost a magic touch.

Begin to take it NOW.

TO THE WOMEN OF THE UNITED STATES.

DR. S. B. HARTMAN.

In view of the great multitude of women suffering from some kind of female disease, and yet unable to find any cure, Dr. Hartman, the renowned gynæcologist, has announced his willingness to direct the treatment of as many cases as may make application to him during the summer months without charge.

The treatment will be conducted by correspondence. The doctor will prescribe all medicines, applications, hygienic and dietary regulations necessary to complete a cure. The medicines prescribed can be obtained at all drug stores. This offer will hold good only during the summer months. Any woman can become a regular patient by sending a written statement of her age, condition of life, history and symptoms of her derangements.

All cases of female diseases, including menstrual irregularities, displacements, ulcerations, inflammations, discharges, irritation of the ovaries, tumors and dropsy of the abdomen, should apply at once and become registered as regular patients. All correspondence will be held strictly confidential. No testimonials of cures will be given to the public except by the express wish of the patient.

As is well known, Dr. Hartman is the President of the Hartman Sanitarium, an institution which has a department devoted exclusively to the treatment of female diseases. He is thus brought to see thousands of such cases every year, the most of whom return to their homes to be treated by correspondence. The principal remedy he relies upon in such cases is Peruna, which every woman should have, who has any affection of this kind. Those wishing to become patients should address DR. S. B. HARTMAN, COLUMBUS OHIO.

No one knows better than Dr. Hartman how much the women suffer with diseases peculiar to their sex. No one knows better than he does how many of them suffer with such diseases. Patiently, hopefully, wearily, and often silently, they eke out a miserable existence year after year.

A woman confined to the house several years with a chronic female derangement had finally given up all hope of being cured. She had tried physician after physician, and remedy after remedy, without any permanent improvement. Her treatment had cost her husband, who was a poor man, hundreds of dollars. They had been obliged to deny themselves many comforts of life in order to get money enough to pay the physicians.

Picking up the paper one day she happened to read an item which contained the news that Dr. Hartman would treat such cases free of charge by letter. She immediately wrote the doctor, describing her case, and giving him all her symptoms. She soon received a letter telling her exactly what to do and what medicines and appliances to get. She began the treatment (the principal remedy being Peruna) at once, and in a few weeks was well and strong again and able to do her own work.

Another woman who used Peruna without becoming one of Dr. Hartman's regular patients had the following experience. Miss Ida Green writes from Baldwinville, Ga.: "Peruna is wonderful and good, and a certain cure for female weakness. I have been ill and have been taking doctor's medicine for several years, and found that none did me any good.

"Every day it was a worry. I was always sick. I had come to the conclusion to give up, and not use any more medicine. I was sick indeed for the past two years. Just before I began to take Peruna I was very weak, besides I was bilious and constipated.

"I had pains in my back and side and falling of the womb, with bearing down pains.

"One day while reading my newspaper, I came across an ad., read of the book for women entitled, "Health and Beauty," and sent for it. Then I began to use the medicine. After using several bottles I am now thoroughly cured."

Send for free book, entitled, "Health and Beauty." Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio.

John H. Uhl of this city, brother of the late Edwin F. Uhl of Grand Rapids gets $3,000 from the estate of his brother. The will was filed in the probate court at Grand Rapids Wednesday. Mr. Uhl, who is named general administrator in the will, was appointed special administrator by the court. The entire estate, it is estimated, is valued at about $150,000, of which $30,00 is real estate value. The principal legatee is Mrs. Uhl, who is left the entire estate, with the exception of two legacies amounting to $7,500. The other $4,500 was bequeathed to Mrs. Margaret Follett of Chicago.

Messrs. C. W. Rogers and B. E. Cook have been chosen as two members of the whist team of 12 which will represent Michigan in the Brooklyn trophy contest at the next meeting of the American Whist League at Milwaukee. In addition to the two Ypsilantians there will be two each from Kalamazoo, Manistee, Detroit, Saginaw and Grand Rapids, and the teams they will play will be similarly chosen from different clubs and the several states. The selection of Messrs. Rogers and Cook is an honor to Ypsilanti whisters as it shows that they rank with the foremost players of the state.

The editor was shown a bottle of oil Saturday said to have been taken from the Saline river near Milan, where there is prospecting going on at the present time. It was dipped up from the river, it is said, with a spoon at a point where it runs out of the earth and spreads over the surface of the water for some distance round about. The sample shown certainly contained a large percentage of oil. It is said that leases are being made in that section now and as soon as enough have been secured work in boring will begin. If oil and gas are found in large enough quantities to pay of course the field will be rapidly developed. There are those who feel very sanguine of the results. These are investing their money in the venture.

The Northville council has taken action in a direction which might well be imitated by the Ypsilanti aldermen. They have ordered that hereafter no board walks be laid within the city limits, and they have made arrangements for purchasing cement by the carload.

Mayor Thompson discussed the question of truants Tuesday. He says there are a large number of children within the compulsory school age who are not in school at all. He proposes to call the attention of the common council and the board of education to this matter and see if a campaign cannot be instituted which will break up this evil. He proposes that the city government co-operate with the board of education in an effort to prevent any child growing up in this community in ignorance. It is said there are nearly 200 children who should be in school who are not there at all. The reason alleged for not enforcing the law at present is lack of school accommodations. But when the new Fifth ward school is ready, and it will be by September, all can be taken care of. The mayor desires that all the machinery be gotten in order for the task before the time comes for commencing work, so that there need be no delay when school opens in the fall.

RESIGNS FROM THE SCHOOL BOARD

D. L. Davis resigned from the city school board at the regular meeting Tuesday evening, his reasons being set forth in the following communication to the board:

To the Board of Education, Ypsilanti, Mich.:

Gentlemen—I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the board of education, the same to take effect Sept. 2 next. It has long been a custom and a good one, I think, to elect one member of the board from the east side. My recent removal from there has left that side with no representative. Believing as I do that that part of the district should have a member on the board, I tender my resignation in order that it may have, and that a member may be elected by you, or at the approaching annual meeting of the district, as you deem best, and all possible complications at that time be thus eliminated.

I desire, before leaving the board, to express to the members my full appreciation of their uniform kindness and courtesy to me in all our official relations.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) D. L. DAVIS.

THE COMMITTEES ARE APPOINTED

At the council meeting Monday evening Mayor Thompson named the following citizens' committees:

Committee on Prevention of Cruelty to Animals—Messrs. I. N. Swift, Andrew Springstead, J. B. Colvan, M. Ryan, W. H. Lewis.

Committees to Investigate Riverside Park Project—Messrs. R. W. Hemphill, Edgar Rexford, William Hay, B. M. Damon, F. T. Newton.

The Federation of Labor union presented a petition signed by their officers and 140 others, including union members and business men, asking that the city pay $3.50 per day for team labor and $1.60 per day for day labor.

On the recommendation of the printing committee, the city printing of letter heads, bill heads, tax receipts, bonds, water receipt books, annual report of officers, etc., was awarded to the Scharf, Tag, Label & Box Co., and the printing of the council proceedings to the Ypsilantian.

The telephone company petitioned for permission to place a row of poles on S. Huron st. from Lang's blacksmith shop to Race street. This petition was effectually disposed of by a resolution in adoption of a recommendation by the streets and walks committee, ordering that all poles be removed from S. Huron st. or placed underground within 30 days.

The poet's exclamation: "O Life! I feel you bounding in my veins," is a joyous one. Persons that can rarely or never make it, in honesty to themselves, are among the most unfortunate. They do not live, but exist; for to live implies more than to be. To live is to be well and strong—to arise feeling equal to the ordinary duties of the day, and to retire not overcome by them—to feel life bounding in the veins. A medicine that has made thousands of people, men and women, well and strong, has accomplished a great work, bestowing the richest blessings, and that medicine is Hood's Sarsaparilla. The weak, run-down, or debilitated, from any cause, should not fail to take it. It builds up the whole system, changes existence into life, and makes life more abounding. We are glad to say these words in its favor to readers of our columns.

I will give one pair of Five-dollar Glasses to the one writing "Carl N. Heglund, Optical Specialist," on a postal card the greatest number of times. One pair of Three-Dollar Glasses to the one writing it the second largest.

Place in the lower right hand corner the number of times you have succeeded in writing it. Contest will be closed July 1, 1901.

HERE is a matter which touches your comfort. You want a clear, fair complexion. This is really nine-tenths a question of the treatment of the pores of the skin. Some toilet soaps are as nippy and keen as mustard. If you will only use the virtue you call your Judgment, it will tell you that any soap which leaves the hands habitually dry is robbing the skin of its natural oil. Free alkali is the robber's name. HOME TALENT IN CONCERT

CLASSICAL AND POPULAR MUSIC COMBINED

Treats in Singing, Dancing, Comedy and Athletics

Many of our citizens may never have had the privilege of hearing and seeing an entertainment given in true vaudeville style, one of the most popular means employed in all the large cities in the United States for entertaining an audience. But the opportunity now presents itself, and what is still better the entire program is made up of the city's best talent. The artists are all well known in their respective parts which assures a program of rare interest.

Detroit's Wonderland has, ever since its existence, received a liberal patronage from our citizens whenever they visit that city, and many are the complimentary words said of its offerings to the amusement loving public. But be that as it may it is sincerely hoped the public will offer a liberal patronage to this deserving local entertainment. Besides, it is the closing event of the season which the management of the city opera house has to offer of a series of well selected entertainments during the past winter.

One week from today, June 12, in the Ypsilanti opera house will appear, at reasonable prices for seats, the following well known local talent in vaudeville:

Four singers—Mr. Harold Spencer, basso; Mr. Fred Ellis, baritone; Miss DeLynn Deubel, soprano, and Miss Pearl Paquette, soprano—in the latest popular and classic songs. None of them need any introduction to the public. Mr. Spencer, for one selection, is to sing the ever popular "Holy City."

Messrs. L. P. Whitcomb and D. Kimball, both of whom have won many laurels in intercollegiate competition, are to appear in horizontal bar work and tumbling.

Messrs. Lyons and Haggett, two of the city's young men, will perform some of their steps in buck and wing dancing.

Miss Florence Curtis and Mr. Roy Buell will appear in one of Maurice Hagerman's most laughable farce comedies entitled "His Own Rival."

Eight men from the Normal gymnasium will go through a series of movements in club swinging which will be a fine display of the best means of exercising now used in such an institution as they represent.

This program will be interspersed throughout with selections from the standard and popular operas, marches and waltzes by the City Opera House orchestra, whom the amusement-loving public have heard during the past season in the city's play house.

This is given entirely by the talent here represented and the proceeds stay at home.

ALLEGED WHEEL THIEF ARRESTED

Marshal Warner and Deputy Tom Ryan Monday afternoon arrested George Wallace, colored, of Belleville, on the charge of stealing a bicycle from the Samson bicycle store Saturday night.

A colored man rode up to Samson's Saturday on a battered wheel and said that he desired to purchase a new machine, but after he had inspected several new models he took the opportunity when the salesman's back was turned to hurry from the shop and ride off with the proprietor's own mount. The employes gave chase on bicycles, but the thief would have escaped with his prize if a husky farmer lad had not joined the chase and overhauled him a short distance from the city limits to the northeast. The colored man escaped on foot, but the wheel was captured and returned to the owner.

From the description given of the man by the Samson people Marshal Warner decided after a little quiet investigation that George Wallace of Belleville was the guilty party, so he and Officers Ryan made the arrest and escorted their prisoner back to the city jail.

The trial was set for June 6 by Justice Childs.

THE DEATH OF REV. FAIRFIELD

Occurred Here Early Sunday Morning

WAS 78 YEARS OLD

He was President of Olivet College for Two Years—Sketch of His Life

Rev. Miner Wynn Fairfield, who died at his home in Ypsilanti, Mich., early Sunday morning, June 2, 1901, was born in Parkersburg, West Virginia, May 20, 1823. In 1840 he went to Oberlin college, graduating in 1844, and three years later from the theological department. In August, 1845, he was married to Emily Frances Fairchild, a college classmate, who survives him. Five children were born to them, three of whom are living—Frederic W., professor in Howard University, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Alice Catharine Hough, of Los Angeles, Cal.; and Charles H., recently in business in Menominee, Mich. In 1847 Mr. Fairfield was ordained to the gospel ministry, and in the years following he occupied pastorates in Congregational churches in Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan. He was president of Olivet college for two years, from 1858 to 1860. For nearly 30 years he has served churches in Lansing, Romeo, Muskegon and Ypsilanti. He closed his pastorate at the latter place in the summer of 1888. After a brief stay with his son in Menominee, he returned to Ypsilanti, where the closing years of his life have been spent, with the exception of a brief pastorate in 1890-91, at Ormond, Fla.

The funeral services were held at the house, 318 Ellis street, at 4 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. The interment was at Romeo beside two daughters, long since dead.

DR. PUTNAM ISSUES A NEW WORK

Dr. Daniel Putnam, the venerable professor emeritus of psychology and pedagogy at the Normal, who is known among educators as the author of various psychological and pedagogical writings, among which are "An Elmentary Psychology" and "A Manual of Pedagogy," which were for years the standard text-books of the Normal in this department, and "A History of the Normal College," has just published a new work which will be received with great interest by those interested in education, as it may be termed the summing up of the author's long and fruitful career as an educator and philosopher. The title of the book is "A Text-Book of Psychology," but it is worthy a more pretentious name, as it is far superior in arrangement and in the nature of the subject matter to the average text-book.

Says the author in his preface: "Several years ago the present writer prepared a small work on elementary psychology, which was published just before the large number of elementary books on the subject made their appearance, and before the new psychology, so-called, had taken any very definite form. That work had a special purpose in view, made no claim to originality of matter, and naturally followed, in its arrangement of material, the usual order of the so-called old psychology. Since that time many changes have occurred in the department of mental science. New theories have been advanced, new modes of expression have been adopted, and new arrangements of matter have come into favor in many quarters. The progress of discussion and further study and investigation have modified to some extent and in some directions, the opinions of the author. The present work is the result of these modifications and changes."

The book follows in general the outline commonly found in psychology texts, devoting a chapter to terms and a general outlook of the subject, a chapter to the nervous system, one to Attention and Interest, considerable space to Presentation and Representation, several chapters to the Thinking Activities — Conception, Judgment, Reasoning; considering Feelings under the heads, Emotions, Sentiments; following that with a discussion of Desires and the Will; concluding with chapters on the Moral Nature and Moral Law, Instinct, Sleep, Dreaming; but aside from this increasing similarity in form, it is decidedly original, the treatment of the different divisions being graphic and interesting, embracing many advanced thoughts which have not before been published in form suitable to the neophye in psychological study.

The chapter on Moral Nature and Moral Law is particularly valuable from an educational standpoint, as it is a much disputed question among educators as to how far the school room may be made a factor in the moral advancement of the child, and the discussion of the Will of Instinct and Habit are also noticeably good. While Dr. Putnam has no radical theories of startling propositions to present, he has taken the best from the leading thinkers of the day and from his own ripe experience, with the result that his text is undoubtedly the most advanced and modern before the public. He has shown his spirit of liberalism by discussing at length Hypnotism, Thought, Suggestion, etc., and by including in the work a comprehensive list of apparatus and illustrations to be used in Experimental Psychology, which is the latest trend of present day psychology.

The work will enhance the professional reputation of Dr. Putnam, and, through him reflect great credit upon the institution with which he has been so many years connected.

YPSILANTI LOST TO LANSING

The Ypsilanti whist team, which has won the state trophy cup at Grand Rapids and defeated in a recent challenge game with Detroit, lost the bit of silver, in a contest with the Lansing team, held at the Hawkins House, Memorial Day afternoon and evening.

The Ypsilantians could excuse themselves by pointing to the fact that they were handicapped by the absence from the team of H. S. Platt, which necessitated the playing of a substitute, W. S. Carpenter, but they prefer to credit their opponents with beating them on equal terms.

The score of the afternoon game was 14 to 11 in favor of Ypsilanti, and of the evening contest 19 to 11 in favor of Lansing, which left the visitors with a margin of 5 points.

The Lansing team consisted of Messrs. Steele, Clark, Van Buren and Nichols; the Ypsilanti players were Messrs. Rogers, Cook, James and Carpenter; and the umpire was Murray Cook, of Saginaw.

The Ypsilantians promptly challenged the victors to a return game, but Detroit and Saginaw are to have the first chances, after which, however, if Lansing still holds the championship, the home team will have an opportunity to vindicate themselves.

WHERE TIME IS LONG AND MEN ARE SCARCE

St. Heliers, Isle of Jersey, Feb. 25. —Time is long in the isle of Jersey, British channel. Nobody ever hurries under any circumstances, and nothing ever changes except feminine fashions. Daughters of Eve will keep up with the styles in Jersey or Jibberaray.

Jersey is one of the loveliest spots of earth, picturesque as well, with a climate like that of California just north of San Francisco. The island is not wildly hilarious or entertaining owing to the set prejudices of the inhabitants, but it is a sweet and wholesome spot, with rare green lanes and ivy grown walls.

And yet this island is ahead of the rest of Great Britain in some respects. It enjoys home rule, and it long ago legalized the marriage with a deceased wife's sister, a point which the British have been tussling over in parliament ever since I can remember. Again, the isle of Jersey is the only spot I ever found where women boarders are as welcome as men. Indeed in the advertisements in the pretty rose pink Jersey newspapers one often finds a special request for respectable lady boarders.

Perhaps, again, landladies would not get any lodgers at all if they did not accept women, for men are scarce as angels in Jersey. So soon as they are old enough Jersey men mostly go up to London, a few of them to Canada, leaving the girls stranded and wishing they could go too. They cannot, however—at least they think they cannot. They remain in Jersey and go to tea with one another of afternoons and exchange embroidery patterns and promenade by the beautiful sea and watch the sun go down behind the foam covered cliffs. So they vegetate and grow old and wither. I have been at a Jersey evening card party where there were seven women and one man, at another where there were nine women and one man. That is about the ordinary proportion.

Gently and quite in accordance with the rules of established propriety the women of this Adamless Eden advance year by year down the corridors of time, promenading each sunny day by the sea. They are as fixed in their notions as a Chinaman. One might conclude that they are the reincarnations of souls that were set in their ways and sent back to learn better, only these old girls of Jersey seem so content and so well satisfied with themselves that there is no possibility of their learning any better.

Naturally, leading this serene vegetable existence, the women who walk by the sea live to be very old, sometimes more than 100. There are more old women in Jersey than in any other place I ever saw. I don't know what becomes of the old men or if there are any. Jersey is the paradise of old women. Fifty, 60, 70 years ago they promenaded along the walk with the brisk, springy step of a girl. Mayhap in that long ago time one or two walked with a sweetheart. Now they shuffle along softly in their heelless cloth shoes or sit hour after hour in the sunshine watching the glinting waves, but they recall tenderly to this day that springtime picture in which a young man was in the foreground.

Sometimes these ancient dames become too feeble to walk. Then they are conveyed to the same promenade in wheeled invalid chairs. Occasionally the dame in the invalid chair is a widow, married in the days when there were young men in Jersey. She is wheeled adown the beautiful sea walk by gray haired daughters who themselves would be elderly women only that their mother is so much older. Occasionally one of these ancients, maid or widow, visits the walk for the last time. Her acquaintances miss her, and they open the pretty rose pink afternoon paper to read among the death notices, perhaps, an announcement like this:

"On Monday, Feb. 25, Miss Mary le Quesne, in the ninety-first year of her age. Deeply regretted."

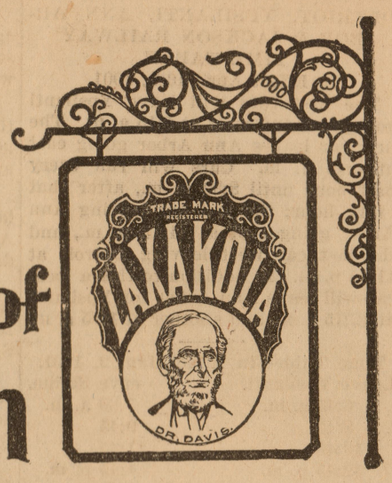
The Sign of Health



Dizziness and headaches cannot be cured in any other manner than by getting at the root of the trouble and curing the cause.

The cause is almost invariably a disordered digestive system, or else a bad stomach and clogged bowels are responsible. Laxakola, the great Tonic Laxative, is an unfailing cure.

It works gently and painlessly and at the same time acts as a tonic to the bowels, stomach, liver and kidneys and builds up the system instead of weakening and irritating it as other laxatives do.

Its remarkable properties reach every organ—the liver, kidneys and stomach, nerve, heart and brain—and removes the cause of your debilitated condition. This is the only way to secure an absolute and permanent cure. Laxakola is the only medicine for babies, is purely vegetable and its action is gentle, speedy and effective. For coated tongue, simple fevers, colds, chills and languid feeling it is the ideal medicine.

It tastes good. ☞ Children like it and ask for it.

LAXAKOLA FOR WOMEN. It is a gentle and safe remedy to use during all conditions of health of the gentler sex whenever their peculiar and delicate constitutions require a mild and efficient laxative and tonic, and is invaluable in assisting to relieve obstructions which otherwise would lead to more or less severe pain or illness.

It improves the complexion, brightens the eyes, sharpens the appetite, quickens the circulation, removes muddy and blotched condition of the skin and cures sick headache to a certainty by removing the cause.

To women suffering from chronic constipation, headaches, biliousness, dizziness, sallowness of the skin and dyspepsia, Laxakola will invariably bring relief. At druggists, 25c. and 50c., or send for free sample to THE LAXAKOLA CO., 132 Nassau Street, N. Y., or 356 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

"Hello!" exclaimed Dr. Bascomb as he entered his office, where Jack Kenly was walking back and forth while waiting for him. "What is the matter? You look worried."

"I am worried," said Kenly as he shook hands. "Have you seen Nellie lately?"

"Not since a week ago Thursday, just before you started on your trip to Cincinnati. Is there anything the matter with her?"

"I can't say for certain, but I am afraid there is. She says herself that she is quite well, but she is so silent and irritable that I am afraid her nerves are out of order."

"Well, I'll drop around and see her some time during the day," said the doctor.

"No; I don't think you had better do that," said the young husband. "She protests that there is nothing the matter, and if you made a professional call it might make her angry and increase her nervousness. But, say, can't you come round and have dinner with us and have a smoke with me afterward? And perhaps you could diagnose her case without her suspecting anything, and then you could prescribe something that would help her."

"All right," said the doctor. "Call for me on your way home, and I'll go along."

Having relieved his mind by making this arrangement, Kenly went to his office and during the afternoon telegraphed to his wife that Dr. Bascomb would be with them to dinner. This was not unusual, for he and the bachelor doctor were old college chums and still retained much of the friendship of their student days. As young Mrs. Kenly had made it a point to make herself agreeable to her husband's old friends, so that he would never feel that he had given up too much of his old life when he married, and as she had developed a warm personal friendship for the young doctor, he usually spent at least one evening a week at their house. So there was nothing in the doctor's visit to excite her suspicion.

While Kenly and the doctor were strolling to the house Kenly talked of his wife's ailment, of which he had thoroughly convinced himself. Like many healthy people, he had an almost morbid dread of illness, and his talk had the effect of making Dr. Bascomb very alert for subtle symptoms, for nervous disorders are so elusive.

To their surprise Mrs. Kenly greeted them at the door with her accustomed liveliness, and when dinner was served was the life of the little party, just as she had always been in the past. Indeed her liveliness seemed greater than usual, for her husband was somewhat silent because he was worried and thought that his friend could diagnose the case better if he kept in the background. The doctor, being professionally alert, ascribed her brightness to the elation that so frequently follows dejection and was working up quite a serious case. After dinner Kenly made the excuse that he had no good cigars in the house and went out to buy some so as to leave the doctor and his wife together.

"How are you feeling these days?" inquired the doctor when they were alone, in a tone that he tried hard to make unprofessional.

"Why, I never felt better in my life."

"That's good. You never even have the blues, do you?"

"Of course, I have the blues sometimes. Who doesn't?"

"Um-m! Never see sparks of fire before your eyes when you turn your head suddenly, do you?"

"See here. Are you putting me through a medical examination? Do you want to feel my pulse and see my tongue?"

"Well, that would do no harm," said the doctor, seizing her wrist and taking out his watch. She snatched her hand away almost angrily.

"No, I am not going to let you feel my pulse, and if you are not careful you may feel my tongue instead of seeing it."

The doctor gravely meditated on these symptoms of irritability, and, noticing his silence, Mrs. Kenly looked at him with some alarm.

"Why, you don't think there is anything the matter with me, do you?"

"Oh, no," said the doctor with professional diplomacy, not wishing to excite his patient; "but you know I always look after the health of my friends even when they are not asking me to."

"But I don't see why you should be paying attention to mine just now when I am simply brutally healthy. Has Jack been talking to you? I remember he said something about my not looking well when he got back." And a momentary frown wrinkled her brow. But the arrival of Jack prevented further talk on the subject of health, and the two men retired to the library to smoke.

A CASE FOR AN EXPERT

By Peter McArthur.

Copyright, 1900, by Peter McArthur.

"Well?" asked the anxious husband after they had lit their cigars.

"Oh, there is nothing serious," said the young doctor, with a wise look. "Her nerves are certainly strung to a high pitch, and I should say that her liver is affected somewhat. She probably worried at being left alone while you were away, and that wore on her."

"But what do you suggest?" asked the husband. "Are you going to prescribe for her?"

"Not medicines. She doesn't realize that there is anything the matter with her, and if I ordered drugs it would only tend to make her worse, for, after all, there is something in the contention of the mental scientists that people are sick when they think they are. It is particularly true of people of a nervous temperament. On the other hand, the fact that she does not realize her condition is dangerous, for she might go on thinking herself quite well until something really serious developed."

"But what can we do?" asked Kenly, now thoroughly alarmed.

"Well, I think a change of scene and lively company, with complete rest, would fix her up all right in a few weeks, and that would be a cure she could take without knowing anything about it except that she was having a good time."

"But I am afraid I can't get away with her just now."

"Of course you can't, but she could go to the seaside somewhere near by, and you could spend your Sundays with her, or she could go to the mountains."

"That's so. I'll suggest it to her tonight, for she seems to be in a better mood than she has been of late."

"Yes," said the doctor, "that is one of the strongest signs of her disordered condition. She seesaws from dejection to elation, and tonight she is up. The necessity of playing the hostess lifted her, and, like all people whose nerves are affected, she drew too heavily on her resources, and for that reason was unnaturally bright."

By the time the conversation had ended Kenly was thoroughly alarmed, and he noticed with fear the liveliness of his wife when they returned to the parlor and she played and sang for them. Not wishing to let her exhaust herself the doctor left early.

They were silent for a few minutes after his departure, and Kenly noticed that the animation died from his wife's face and that she had returned to the mood that had alarmed him. But that only spurred him on to do what he considered his duty.

"I have been thinking, my dear," he began, "that you should really go away somewhere for a rest. Lots of people are going away for their holidays just now, and though I can't go yet, I could arrange to spend my Sundays with you."

"A rest!" she exclaimed with unsuspected energy. "Who told you I was tired?"

"Oh, I don't exactly mean a rest, but a holiday, a good time."

"I must say you are getting very thoughtful—of late."

He affected not to notice the ironical intonation of her remark and proceeded:

"Then you will go, won't you? Which would you prefer, the seaside or the mountains?"

Instead of replying she walked up to him and, looking into his face with blazing eyes, said slowly, but intensely:

"JOHN KENLY, I WANT YOU TO TELL ME."

"John Kenly, I want you to tell me why you want to get me out of town."

"Want you to go out of town? You wrong me, my dear. I shall be very lonely without you and will be sorry to have you go away, but I really think you should go."

"Why should I go? I haven't asked for a holiday, and I know we can't afford the expense, and I don't need to go."

Suddenly an idea occurred to her.

"Was it you that put Dr. Bascomb up to trying to scare me about my health? I know it was, and he and you have some scheme in mind and want to get rid of me for awhile."

"Oh, my dear, you do not mean that."

"I mean every word of it, and, what is more, I mean to stay right here until you go for your holidays, and then I'll go with you—to watch you."

"Hush, dear, and we will drop the matter for the present."

"Yes, and for the future too," she replied, for she had a temper of her own that was quite sufficient for all requirements.

Kenly was afraid that he would aggravate the trouble if he continued the argument until she became more exhausted than she was, so he let the matter drop, resolving at the same time to ask Dr. Bascomb if it would not be better to gently break to her the news of her condition and get her to allow herself to be properly treated. In the morning her eyes were red with silent weeping, but she did not choose to take her husband into favor again, so he went gloomily to his office.

On his way home he called on Dr. Bascomb and told of the failure of his prescription.

"Ah!" said the doctor. "That is serious, and now we must break the matter to her. You had better go home and avoid the subject, and I will drop in during the evening, and we will talk things over quietly. My being there will save her a fright, for I can assure her that there is nothing really serious the matter yet."

The plan was agreed to and Kenly went home. His wife met him at the door in an alarming state of excitement. She was half laughing and half crying, and all the while she kept her hand pressed to her throat.

"Why, what is the matter?" he asked, with ill concealed anxiety.

By way of reply she slipped her disengaged arm around him and laughed up at him as she said:

"OH, IT'S ALL RIGHT," SAID KENLY.

"I suspect we have been a couple of geese, and I will confess to you if you will to me."

"What do you mean?"

"If you will confess to me why you wanted me to go out of town, I will confess why I have been so disagreeable to you ever since you came back from the west."

In spite of his agreement with the doctor Kenly saw that he would have an excellent chance to break things gently to her, so he agreed.

"Go ahead," he said. "Though I did not think you were cross."

"Oh, yes, I was, and it was all because I thought you had forgotten my birthday." And she withdrew her hand from her throat and showed the brooch he had ordered sent to the house for her during his absence.

"Your mother sent it to me today and said there had evidently been a mistake. You had absentmindedly given your old address, and, as your name is the same as your father's, the jeweler naturally sent it to your mother. Why didn't you tell me that you had sent it?"

"I thought that if you didn't think it worth speaking about I would say nothing either, and then you were so different from what you usually were that I got alarmed."

"Alarmed?"

"Yes; I thought you were ill, and when Dr. Bascomb was here he diagnosed your case as one of overstrained nerves and liver complaint, and that was why I wanted you to go out of town, so as to get a change and a rest. We thought it would only make you worse to alarm you by saying anything about your condition, but when you objected so positively we decided to tell you, and Dr. Bascomb is coming around to see you tonight."

It may sound undignified, but Mrs. Kenly simply shrieked with laughter. At last she gasped:

"So—so I have liver complaint, have I, and nerves? Oh, wait until I see him! Why, I was only cool to you and cross because I thought you had forgotten my birthday. But it seems it wasn't enough that we should make fools of ourselves. He had to come in and do the thing scientifically. Oh!"

When Dr. Bascomb came, he found his prospective patient and her foolish looking husband sitting on a sofa in a way that suggested the honeymoon.

"Oh, it is all right," said Kenly. "I have been a doddering idiot, and you"—But his wife's laughter drowned all further remarks.

"I never knew that family rows were now considered pathologically, doctor. I have a number of friends that are ailing in that way, and I shall take pleasure in recommending you."

The doctor looked from one to the other in helpless amazement. They both seemed to have gone crazy.

"It was just this way," said Kenly. "I was having a row with my wife and didn't know it, and all the symptoms we observed were nothing more or less than ordinary temper."

Then they told him the whole story, and now all Mrs. Kenly's friends think it was just lovely of Dr. Bascomb to send her such a beautiful pair of vases. But they don't know the story she has kept a secret.

Saved by Angelic Vision

Spirit Form Leads Dying Man To Water In the Desert

At Eastertide there was celebrated a wedding at Tombstone, A. T., that marked the happy ending of a romance, a part of which was the miraculous rescue of the bridegroom from death in the desert by the vision of his sweetheart, which guided him to a spring of water. James Wells and Jessie Shafter were the happy groom and bride.

James Wells was interested in mining ventures in southern Arizona, and in one of his journeys over the desert he lost his way and wandered aimlessly about until his pony became exhausted and was abandoned, and, slinging his water bottle over his shoulder, he headed for the mountains which he could see in the distance.

Wells says that when he found no water there he turned back, for he still had strength and sense enough to know he must keep pegging along the trail. But he never reached it. The sun came up a redhot ball of fire and caught him hunting for it.

"I was dying of thirst," he said in recounting his experiences, "and I knew it was only a question of a little while before I'd go loco unless I could get relief. Talk about nerve! I tell you it takes all a man's got when he finds himself in the fight to save himself from going crazy. Even my bones were baked in that savage heat, but I admit it sent cold shivers down my back when I thought that if I didn't keep the hardest kind of a grip on myself I'd go crazy for lack of a drink of water.

"At last, after a hand to hand tussle, I managed to reach a bowlder and sink gasping in its shadow. Plain tuckered out would have been a siesta to the way I felt. I felt simply that the next gasp would wheeze out what little life was still hanging to my blistered hide.

"I guess I must have taken a little nap, for when I came to I felt a bit better. The air felt cooler, and somehow I seemed to sense it that relief was coming, though for the life of me I couldn't tell from where. I had promised to call on Jessie Shafter next day, and I felt certain that I'd be able to keep my promise. Right in the midst of all this cheerful change I looked up, and there was a figure floating in white draperies beckoning to me. It was the attitude and garb of a saint or angel, but the face was Jessie Shafter's, and her blue eyes were full of pity, and her brown hair hung in ripples over her shoulders, and her white hand beckoned me on. I seemed to walk, but she just floated by my side, and when I asked whither a voice softer than silence said, 'To the Savior spring.' Vaguely I remembered having heard of a spring of that name, but I could never have found my way to it unaided.

"Whenever I stumbled, I heard a rustle as of wings, and there was that floating figure at my side, ever beckoning me on. At length I heard the indistinct gurgle of a tiny spring and, with a cry, threw myself, face downward, to parch my maddening thirst. Still Jessie was at my side, but now the look of pity in those deep blue eyes changed to a smile. Then she bade me lie down and sleep, and, with a whispered 'Sweet dreams' from St. Jessie, I went into dreamland.

"Now comes the curious part of my experience. When I woke up, I was at Savior spring all right, but there wasn't any blessed Jessie in sight—only three dirty Navajo Indians. I made 'em bring up their ponies and pack me over to Hinman's station, where I got a buckboard to Atkins'. Jessie was there, and she declared she had never left Atkins' place. But I'll swear she met me out there in the desert and guided me to the Savior spring. It was either Jessie or her spirit, dead sure, and if that isn't a miracle I don't know what it is. That's why I'm going to call her St. Jessie."

As for Jessie Shafter, she laughs whenever Jim Wells addresses her as St. Jessie, not because she regards the matter as a joke, for there is a half sad, half mysterious light in her eyes all the time. With her acquaintances she won't even discuss the matter. To an intimate friend she said that her whole mind had been set on Jim's home coming, because they were to be married on Easter day, and she was fearful he would meet with some accident or attempt some desperate feat in his rides about the territory. On the night he was lost in trying to reach the arroyo she retired in an exceedingly nervous condition. A strange foreboding of evil preyed on her mind, and, try as she would, she could not shake it off. Later on she had a vivid dream and saw Jim struggling across the burning desert. He was mad from thirst and heat.

She hastened to him and by the aid of an unseen power guided him to a spring. Then she woke up in a semi-hysterical condition, firmly believing she had had a hideous nightmare. So overwrought was she that she went into Mrs. Atkins' room, woke her up and told her of the dreadful dream she had had. Mrs. Atkins did her best to comfort the girl, but the dream had made such an impression on Jessie that she could not go to sleep again that night. She remained in this highly nervous condition till Wells was driven up to the house in the buckboard of Billy Hinman.

That's the story of Jim Wells' experience, and that's the reason his friends are asking each other, Was Jim guided to the Savior spring by a vision of a saint or was he plum loco and just imagined that he saw her?

On one point, however, they are agreed—namely, that Miss Jessie deserves to be dubbed "St. Jessie" on account of her pure goodness of heart, and this Easter they are going to dance at the wedding of St. Jessie and Jim Wells.

PERILOUS RIDE OF A TRAMP

For Eight Hours He Was Locked In a Car With Two Monstrous Tarantulas.

When a freight train from the Pacific coast pulled into the railroad siding at Tucson, A. T., not long ago, the yard employees heard a tremendous pounding and muffled yelling apparently from inside one of the cars. They ran down the line and located the uproar in a sealed box car loaded with oranges from a fruit ranch in southern California. The yardmaster continues the story:

"Help! Murder!" somebody shouted behind the door. "Let me out! Let me out!" and then came a terrific volley of kicks. "What's the matter?" called the yardmaster, too much astonished to know what to do. "Murder! Murder! Let me out quick!" screamed the voice. By that time quite a crowd had collected, and of course everybody had a different suggestion. "Better be mighty careful about opening the car," said one man excitedly. "If somebody's being murdered, the other fellow is going to make a rush, and the chances are he has a knife!" That caused a general falling back, but the yardmaster was game, and it took him about five seconds to twist off the seal and push back the door. As he did so the toughest looking tramp I ever saw in my life tumbled headlong into the yard. There was no doubt about his being scared. His lips were as blue as indigo, and his eyes were sticking out of their sockets like hard boiled eggs. "Look out for the other fellow!" yelled the crowd. "There ain't no other fellow," groaned the tramp. "It's tarantulas! There's two big tarantulas in that car, jumping all over everywhere!"

Well, as it turned out, this unfortunate hobo was trying to beat his way to El Paso in the sealed box car and was having a pretty comfortable time of it when he happened to look toward the door, and there, in a streak of daylight that came through at the bottom he saw two enormous tarantulas squatting on the floor. He had knocked around southern California long enough to know them at a glance and came near toppling over from pure fright. While he was staring at the things, they disappeared. That was on the morning of the day the train reached Tucson, and for eight or ten mortal hours he roosted there in the dark, expecting every minute to feel one of the horrible hairy brutes on his hands or neck.

Forewarned, Forearmed.

The liability to disease is greatly lessened when the blood is in good condition, and the circulation healthy and vigorous. For then all refuse matter is promptly carried out of the system; otherwise it would rapidly accumulate—fermentation would take place, the blood become polluted and the constitution so weakened that a simple malady might result seriously.

A healthy, active circulation means good digestion and strong, healthy nerves.

As a blood purifier and tonic S. S. S. has no equal. It is the safest and best remedy for old people and children because it contains no minerals, but is made exclusively of roots and herbs.

No other remedy so thoroughly and effectually cleanses the blood of impurities. At the same time it builds up the weak and debilitated, and renovates the entire system. It cures permanently all manner of blood and skin troubles.

Mr. E. E. Kelly, of Urbana, O., writes: "I had Eczema on my hands and face for five years. It would break out in little white pustules, crusts would form and drop off, leaving the skin red and inflamed. The doctors did me no good. I used all the medicated soaps and salves without benefit. S. S. S. cured me, and my skin is as clear and smooth as any one's."

Mrs. Henry Siegfried, of Cape May, N. J., says that twenty-one bottles of S. S. S. cured her of Cancer of the breast. Doctors and friends thought her case hopeless.

Richard T. Gardner, Florence, S. C., suffered for years with Boils. Two bottles of S. S. S. put his blood in good condition and the Boils disappeared.

HORSE THIEVES AGAIN AT WORK

JOHN L. HUNTER'S HORSE TAKEN FRIDAY EVENING

Also Secured a Top Buggy and Harness From the Barn of George Slayton

The festive horse thief is at his work again in this vicinity. Sunday night John L. Hunter, ex-chairman of the board of supervisors, had a valuable horse stolen from his farm between the hours of 10 in the evening and 5 this morning. Mr. Hunter returned home from Ypsilanti, where he had been to church, some time after 9 o'clock. Everything was all right then. The theft was discovered shortly after 5 o'clock this morning. The thief may have many hours' start therefore. The stolen animal is a bay mare with heavy main and tail, no shoes on, six years old and weighs 1,300 pounds.

The thief, after securing the horse, went to the barn of George Slayton and took his top buggy and a single harness belonging to his son Fred and drove south on the west Monroe road. The harness is a black trimmed one, nearly new. There is absolutely no clue to the thief. It is thought he belongs to the same gang that stole Fount Watling's horse a few months ago.

Officers are scouring the country in search of the property and the thief. The Vigilance association offers a reward of $100 for the capture of the thief and it is hoped he will be speedily caught.

SPIRITED DEBATE YESTERDAY

WHAT COLORS SHALL BE WORN AT THE INTERCOLLEGIATE MEET?

A GRAVE QUESTION

Some Favor the Normal Colors, Some the Colors of the Athletic Association.

A spirited debate was carried on at the Normal chapel exercises yesterday morning to decide whether the Normal contingent shall wear the yellow and white of the Athletic association or the green and white of the college at the Intercollegiate Field Day at Hillsdale, Friday and Saturday, the outcome being a large majority vote in favor of the green and white. It has been the custom for several years back for the Normal rooters to flaunt the college Athletic association colors on Field Day, but very wisely this year a change was advocated, as it is contrary to all student traditions to ignore a college for its athletic association.

The Normal contestants will therefore be cheered on to victory tomorrow and Saturday by the sight of the Normal green and white.

THE VERY HIGHEST INDORSEMENT

Given by A. R. Gray, M. D., to a Leading Proprietary Medicine Which Differs From Others

The American Journal of Health has so frequently warned its readers against speciously advertised nostrums that it is a genuine pleasure to come upon a bona fide cure, even if that cure is found in a proprietary medicine instead of the laboratory of some great medical college. That the remedy in question is fully as efficient in its results as it would be if a council of physicians had bestowed formal approval upon the same, cannot be doubted. Reference is had to Lansfield's German Liver, Stomach, Blood and Kidney Cure, which is compounded by the H. R. Lansfield Medicine Company, 128 Lafayette avenue, Detroit. The writer has personal cognizance of many cures that have followed the use of this medicine and, therefore, does not hesitate to commend its employment in all cases coming within the scope of its claims, including erysipelas, syphilis, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, malaria, constipation and all diseases arising from impure blood or a disordered stomach. A remedy which has achieved such beneficent results is surely as worthy of praise as would be a physician who had performed equally successful services. No single medical practitioner can boast of a larger proportion of genuine cures and few have ever been able to effect anything like the same number, therefore it is merely a matter of justice to call attention to the value of Lansfield's German Liver, Stomach, Blood and Kidney Cure.

Every health journal receives enquiries daily concerning treatment for this and that ailment, and it is a matter for conscientious consideration, as the writers rely so implicitly upon the advice given by their favorite magazine, otherwise they would not consult the hygienic publications regarding such matters. It is not frequently a health journal can speak so unreservedly in praise of a remedy as we have seen fit to speak concerning Lansfield's German Liver, Stomach, Blood and Kidney Cure, but there are not many remedies of such decided merit. That it possesses specific virtues cannot be doubted by anyone who makes a candid investigation, and there is not a physician but will admit after an unbiased examination that Lansfield's German Liver, Stomach, Blood and Kidney Cure is far superior to the majority of the means afforded by the remedies of the materia medica.

As far as the American Journal of Health is concerned the sole and only interests it has at stake are those of its readers, hence it can speak without the suspicion of trying to benefit the manufacturers of any proprietary medicine in a financial way. Guided by this principle it has exposed the false claims of worthless nostrums again and again. This has been done for the protection of its readers. For the same reason—the protection and benefit of those who seek these pages for instruction upon all matters pertaining to health and well-being—it now bestows editorial endorsement upon Laansfield's German Liver, Stomach, Blood and Kidney Cure, and declares it to be a specific remedy of unquestioned worth.

THE SUPREMACY AT SEA

How Two Trust Kings Will Win It For United States.

GIANT COMBINATION PLANNED.

Rockefeller and Morgan, the Trust King, In League to Own a Monopoly of Ocean Traffic Lines Already Controlled—Will Carry Yankee Coal to Newcastle.

The purchase of the Leyland Steamship line by J. Pierpont Morgan in London goes far toward the perfection of a scheme long entertained by Mr. Morgan and the Rockefellers for the mercantile mastery of the seas, says the New York Journal. For years past John D. Rockefeller and J. Pierpont Morgan have been America's largest bidders for the tremendous commercial business between the United States and Europe. They have spent much of their time in planning for maritime expansion, wherein the twin flags of the greatest financiers in the world shall predominate in every port of every sea.

The purchase of the Leyland line is regarded in shipping circles as a long step in this direction. John D. Rockefeller already controls the American Navigation company, which includes the Atlantic Transport line and the Red Star line. He is also a heavy stockholder in the Pacific Mail company. The Atlantic Transport company alone has a fleet of 46 lake vessels. Outside of this fleet the International Navigation company owns and operates an ocean squadron of 25 huge vessels, with a total tonnage of 181,692. The purchase of the Leyland line by Mr. Morgan is said to be in the interests of the trusts in general and of those trusts controlled by Rockefeller and Morgan in particular.

Oil, iron and steel, sugar, tobacco, leather and copper form almost one-third of the entire exports of the United States. The export value of these articles amounts to about $400,000,000 yearly. The freightage has heretofore been enormous, amounting to many millions yearly. Experts are agreed that by this new scheme of consolidation or control of American shipping the trusts controlled by Morgan and Rockefeller can save at least $10,000,000 yearly in carrying their own products to foreign markets. It will be possible by this means to undersell the French or British or German merchants or manufacturers at their very doors.

Moreover, there must be considered an item of possibly far greater importance than any yet enumerated. The Morgan-Rockefeller railroad-steel-oil-copper-et al. combine practically controls the anthracite coal district. By owning a traffic monopoly on the high seas they will be in a position not only to force a market or markets for American coal—of which there is always a surplus—but they will also make a traffic profit on the coal exports. The same applies largely to breadstuffs and cotton, also within the grip of the Rockefeller-Morgan clique.

The White Star line, the Cunard line and the English companies were in communication with Mr. Morgan while the subsidy bill was being discussed in congress, but the defeat of that measure put an end to the deal.

If the Leyland line, just secured by Mr. Morgan, is merged with the International Navigation company, owned by John D. Rockefeller, it will comprise the greatest shipping combination the world has ever seen.

"Sir Christopher Furness of London says that this new move of Mr. Morgan will seriously threaten the English coal trade," said a Broad street banker the other day. "He is right. Morgan is now in a position to gobble up England's coal business almost at pleasure. The new coal tax helps him. All that has kept him from carrying Pennsylvania coal to Newcastle heretofore has been the lack of sea carrying power. Mr. Morgan now has that power, and you will see the wildest kind of a stir when the products of the trusts in this country are dumped on the foreign markets at prices cheaper than local dealers can meet."

The exports of this country have grown in the past seven years from $847,665,194 in 1893 to $1,370,763,571 in 1900. Of the copper exports, amounting to about $12,000,000 yearly, Mr. Rockefeller ships about two-thirds, or $8,000,000. Of iron and steel exports, valued at $121,913,548, the United States steel trust controls three-quarters, or $90,000,000.

NEW ORIENTAL ROUTE.

Big Steamship and Railroad Project Under Way.

PLENTY OF CAPITAL AT HAND.

Millions of Dollars to Be Spent by a Syndicate—New Pacific Coast Port Is to Be Established—Shortness of the Route Will Be One of Its Big Advantages.

Back of the recent purchase of the Mexican Central railroad by the syndicate headed by H. Clay Pierce of St. Louis is one of the most important steamship and railroad transportation schemes matured in recent years, says a Chicago dispatch to the New York Herald. The acquisition of the road was the first step in a campaign which the syndicate is to carry on for the export and import trade between the United States and the orient by the way of a new Pacific coast port to be established at Manzanillo, on the southern coast of Mexico.

The new oriental route will be 1,200 miles shorter from New York than the San Francisco route. Millions of dollars are to be expended by the syndicate, in which the Seligmans of New York and St. Louis capitalists are interested, in making the route the most desirable from a shipping standpoint. Details have been arranged, and work on several of the connecting lines and extensions and on the new harbor has already been started.

The establishment of the new oriental route was admitted the other day by John J. Mitchell, president of the Illinois Trust and Savings bank, who was recently elected to a position on the directory of the Mexican Central.

The port of Manzanillo is about 200 miles south of Banderas bay and about 75 miles directly west of Colima, Mexico, which is the western terminus of the Mexican Central. It is a natural landlocked harbor, well adapted for the entry of the largest seagoing vessels. At present it is visited by a few tramp steamers and by small vessels engaged in coast trade. The new syndicate already has contracted for the building of four freight steamers. This order is said to be but a beginning, as passenger steamships may be ordered, and as the trade grows additional freighters will be added to the fleet. The final link in the chain of railroads from Colima to the coast is under construction by the Mexican Central and will be completed in a few months.

It is understood that close traffic relations will be entered into between the Frisco officials and the Pennsylvania, which will give them through connections from coast to coast by way of St. Louis. Friendly relations may be established with the Baltimore and Ohio and the Big Four, which would not be difficult, in view of the Pennsylvania's controlling interest in both.

From St. Louis the route to Manzanillo will be as follows: The Frisco line by the way of Monett, Sapula and Dennison to Sherman, Tex. From Sherman a line will be built southwest to Fort Worth, thence southwest to Brownwood, thence southwest to Spoffords, where a connection will be made with the Mexican International railway, crossing the Rio Grande at Eagle pass and continuing south and west to a connection with the Mexican Central at Torreon.

The purchase by the Frisco of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis gives a short connection from Kansas City straight south to Miami, from which point a connection will be built to Wyandotte on the main line of the Frisco about 70 miles southwest of Monett. From the latter place the Frisco also has a line southwest to Paris, about 50 miles east of Sherman, with which it is connected by the Texas and Pacific. The Paris line is now used in connection with the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe and the International and Great Northern into San Antonio. By using the Southern Pacific from Fort Worth the Frisco also has connections with the Mexican Central and El Paso, for which place the Rock Island is headed. It is not expected that the new service, which will reach Hongkong, Shanghai and all the big cities of the far east, will be in operation in several months.

SHAVED ONE SIDE OF BEARD

Queer Notion of an Alderman While In a Barber Chair.

Alderman James Sullivan of Putnam, near New London, Conn., a few days ago engaged a barber to shave him. Sullivan sat quiet until one-half of his long beard was shaved off and then positively refused to have the other side shaved, says the New York World. The family physician was called in and tried to persuade him, but all to no effect.

The alderman was taken to the insane asylum with one-half of his face unshaved. Sullivan is a grocer in Putnam, and his business drove him insane.

Even Stamps Have a Boom.

The greatest rise in value of late was that sheet of a hundred 2 cent Pan-American stamps in which the accidental inversion of the picture in the center increased the market price of each stamp from 2 cents to $20.—Boston Transcript.

Russia Looking For Chinaware.

Russia's offer to guarantee the Chinese indemnity may be an act of Christian kindness, but it looks, says the San Francisco Chronicle, like a scheme to enable her to pay the debt and foreclose on the country.

MRS. GALLUP'S WOES.

WHILE WASHING DISHES SHE GETS ANOTHER SUMMONS.

On This Occasion She Has Only an Hour Longer to Live and Puts In the Time Giving Mr. Gallup Pointers.

[Copyright, 1901, by C. B. Lewis.]

Mr. Gallup had lain down on the lounge after supper to smoke a pipe, and as Mrs. Gallup cleared off the table and washed the dishes she sang "Weary Souls" at the top of her voice and in high spirits. It might possibly have been her singing which finally lulled Mr. Gallup to sleep and dropped the pipe from his mouth to the floor, although it had never done it before. He was gently snoozing when Mrs. Gallup appeared with hands pressed to her heart and a wabble to her gait, and, sinking into a chair, she gasped:

"Samuel Gallup, I shall be as dead as a crowbar in less'n an hour, and you'd better git up and give me a last embrace."

Mr. Gallup gurgled in his throat as he slept, and without seeming to notice his condition she continued:

"Yes, Samuel, I've got my summons. I was puttin away the last dish when my heart give a sudden bob, my head begun to go round, and right before me I saw my coffin and an open grave. For a minit I thought I was a goner, but then a small voice whispered to me that I'd live an hour longer and that I'd better come in and talk to you. I'm here to say some last dyin words to you, Samuel, and, though I don't expect to draw tears to your eyes, I do hope you'll listen and remember what I say."

At this juncture Mrs. Gallup's tears began to fall and her chin to quiver, and, being so busy with her emotions, she did not even look Mr. Gallup's way. Swallowing at the lump in her throat, she said:

"Samuel, I've allus kinder felt that in case of my death you'd marry ag'in, and it's allus made me feel a little edgewise, but a change has come over me. It come two weeks ago. I'm now resigned to your takin a second wife. In fact, I think it's better you should. Mrs. Teachout was sayin to me the other day that if I dropped off you'd marry ag'in inside of four weeks, as you'd want somebody to comb your hair and cut your toe nails, but I don't think you'd be as mean as that. You'd wait at least three months, wouldn't you?"

Mr. Gallup snored in reply, and, taking this as an answer in the affirmative, Mrs. Gallup went on:

"The usual time is a year, but I ain't askin you to wait that long for me. I've bin a hardworkin wife, and I've allus saved every bit of the soap grease and made the tea last in a way to surprise you, but I ain't askin for any praise. I'm old and humbly and nighsighted, and I can't blame you if you kick up your heels arter I'm gone. Shall you go on a bridal tower with your second wife, Samuel? I ain't askin 'cause I'm jealous, you know, but jest out of curiosity. When we got married, all the bridal tower we had was to go to a circus and come home in a thunderstorm, but if you want to go to Niagara Falls with your new wife don't stop on my account."

As Mr. Gallup hadn't been asked a direct question there was no call for him to wake up, and as Mrs. Gallup felt like weeping she had a fairly good time at it before saying further:

"I did think at one time that if you married a chit of a girl I'd come back and sit on the footboard of the bed and haunt you, but I've changed my mind about it. It ain't in me to be mean. While it 'pears to me that you'd better marry a widder woman about 40 years old, if you decide on a girl of 20 it ain't for me to raise no row. While a widder woman would be at work sewin patches on your trousers and makin apple butter, a gal wife would want to be swingin in a hammock or playin the melodeon, but it's your own lookout. The papers are full of gal wives runnin away with tin peddlers, and you must hev read of 'em as well as me. Was you thinkin of a gal wife or a widder, Samuel?"

Mr. Gallup combined a sigh and a snore and stood mutual, and after hanging on to her chin to stop its shaking Mrs. Gallup continued:

"I was goin to ask you to think of me once in awhile when I was gone, but I don't want to give you trouble. You'll hev nuff to think of with your new wife, and as I shall be flyin round in heaven I'll be all right. Once in awhile, however—once in a while, when your new wife spiles the bread, kicks the cat outdoors, breaks the nose off the teapot and kicks in the head of the vinegar barrel, I wish you'd jest remember how patient and savin I was. Shall you hev a new pump put into the well for your second wife, Samuel? The old one has bin out of order fur nine years, you know, and you've got to pumpety pump for ten minits to git any water. It'll be jest like her to insist on a red pump with a blue handle."

There was no change in the situation

FRENCHY'S MISTAKE.

He Spoke to a Man Who Wasn't to Be Fooled With.

While he didn't look like a quarrelsome man, the street car conductor sized him up as one who'd kick pretty promptly over any shortage of change and soon had reason to rejoice that he had given the nickel with the hole in it to the old man by the door.

"Do you know foreign languages?" asked the man as he licked at his skinned knuckles.

"Can't say that I do."

"Do you know what 'mon ami' means?'

"Oh, yes! That's French for 'my friend.'"

"The deuce it is! Are you sure of it?"

"Dead sure. Did any one 'mon ami' you?"

"That's just what a feller did back there. He came up to me and said, 'Mon ami, can you tell me where Jefferson street is?' And I hauled off and plunked him in the eye in the most beautiful manner."

"But why did you do that?"

"I thought he meant to call me a menagerie on wheels or some other bad name, you know, and I wanted him to understand that I wasn't to be fooled with. So he meant 'my friend,' did he?"

"For sure."

"Well, I'm sorry about it, and if I run across him again I'll hold out my hand and say: 'Shake, mon ami! Jefferson street is right around here somewhere, and if you'll put leeches on that black eye and stick to the English language you'll be all right in three or four days.'" M. QUAD.

Mr. Dodger—Oh, you had better put that in at $30.

RINGLING BROTHERS CIRCUS COMING

When Ringling Brothers' popular big circus exhibited in Ann Arbor last season, the opinion was freely expressed that the performance surpassed anything of the kind that had ever been seen here, and there was a very general desire that the show should pay a return visit. The announcement that the big show is to exhibit in Ann Arbor again Saturday, June 29, will therefore be hailed with universal pleasure. There is no doubt of the popularity of the Ringling show, or of the firm hold it has upon the public. This popularity has been won by legitimate methods and by sheer force of merit. A visit of this show to a city is always a guarantee of a big day and a great performance. This is said to be more than ever the case this season, as the show has been greatly enlarged and many new and novel features added. Especial stress is laid upon the fact that practically everything is new this year, while the menagerie has been enlarged by the addition of several more elephants, numerous caged animals and the only giraffe known to exist anywhere on earth. The parade features have also been greatly elaborated.

HAIR HELP

So many persons have hair that is stubborn and dull. It won't grow. What's the reason? Hair needs help just as anything else does at times. The roots require feeding. When hair stops growing it loses its luster. It looks dead.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

acts almost instantly on such hair. It awakens new life in the hair bulbs. The effect is astonishing. Your hair grows, becomes thicker, and all dandruff is removed.

And the original color of early life is restored to faded or gray hair. This is always the case.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor, and am really astonished at the good it has done in keeping my hair from coming out. It is the best tonic I have tried, and I shall continue to recommend it to my friends."
